Consensus Heartland Cabernet Sauvignon 2013

Langhorne Creek is one of the unsung regions of South Australia where both cabernet sauvignon and shiraz come up trumps under the cooling breezes that flow across Lake Alexandrina into the gum-treed floodplains of the Angas and Bremer rivers. It allows the aromatic distinction cabernet can offer, here in classic dark berry mode with faint eucalypt and forest herbals, the palate textbook blackberry fruit with fine tannin finishing feels.

Twenty-year-old estate-grown grapes are blended with those from much older vines sourced from other local growers. The result is a juicy and generous offering of blackcurrant with hints of minty eucalypt that linger in the background, and a bouquet garni of Mediterranean herbs thrown in for good measure. A classic varietal style for decent midweek drinking.

Vivid ruby. Oak-accented dark berries, cherry pit, licorice and vanilla on the nose and in the mouth. Broad and fleshy in style, with a peppery note adding back-end cut. Dusty tannins lend grip on the persistent finish, which features a repeating vanilla note.
